Crimes of Women

Dr. Samia Hasan Al Saati

The Arab community is one of the few communities that give women dignity and special recognition, and the relationship between men and women is defined by maintaining the dignity of the woman. Therefore, there is less opportunity to find delinquency upon women in the Arab community thus fewer crimes committed by women. Researchers whom interested in crimes by women seek to touch closely and objectively the developments and changes related to the size and type of women crimes.

This book highlights the issue of women crimes. The author starts by discussing the hidden nature of crimes by women and its real dimensions. Also shows the proportion of crimes by women in different countries and factors that affect the size of these crimes. The book then addresses the texts of the Penal Code in the countries which the book aimed to identify the size of women crimes in, the book also explains the impact of religion and social values on the individual’s behavior. The book then deals with raising the awareness on women crimes, where the book addresses the methods used to commit such crimes and their related biological, social and psychological factors.

The book also discusses the integrative approach in the interpretation of women crimes, and the relationship between liberation of women and the degree of urbanity. In conclusion, the book discusses some of the most important Egyptian researches in the field of women crimes, which included: the human image in the minds of prostitutes, the image of prostitutes, convicted female inmates in the Egyptian prisons, prostitution in Cairo: Social survey and clinical study, the phenomenon of pick pocketing upon women in the governorate of Cairo, recidivism to crime upon women, Prostitutes and Crimes: statistical study for the years 1968 and 1969.
